For Jim and Judy Thiessen, the sale had an apprehensive beginning this year. The local trade area is still too dry and the local demand for seedstock is limited. Their 1981 sale did turn out well, however. The cattle sold better than anyone expected them to under the food and weather conditions that prevail in the area. Although prices weren't as high as the seller would like the event moved the cattle along to new homes.

Nevadans to challenge MX proposal in court

At a recent press conference, plans for litigation of the MX Missile project, as now proposed, were made public.

At the conference Ken Lee, president of the Nevada Land Action Assn. (NLAA), said, "The Air Force has left us no other alternative than to litigate."

Lee said the NLAA is launching an all-out campaign to collect funds to support the litigation. The group has retained attorney Arthur Brunwasser of San Francisco, to begin preparing the necessairy litagation.

Consumers Union questions validity of fat-controlled diet

A new examination of the diet-heart theory by Consumers Union (CU) has concluded that "the safety and efficacy of fat-controlled diets have yet to be proven," reports the National Live Stock and Meat Board.

For this reason, CU's medical consultants "cannot recommend such a dietary policy to the entire population."

The CU analysis, reported in the May issue of Consumer Reports, comes one year after the release of "Toward Healthful diets," a study by the National Academy of Sciences which shook up the medical world by questioning the 20-year-old theory that heart disease can be controlled by reducing dietary fat and cholesterol.

"These and a number of other studies by eminent scientists are building a considerable case against dietary change for the entire public," said John L. Huston, president of the Meat Board.

"While it's still too soon to say for sure, it does seem that the tide may be turning as far as fat and cholesterol are concerned. That is encouraging to the livestock and meat industry, which has questioned the theory for many years."

The cholesterol theory has not been without its adherents, Consumer Reports points out.

For patients at risk (those with elevated serum cholesterol, who smoke, have high blood pressure, a family history of heart disease, etc.), "most experts feel that reasonable measures that may reduce risk are justified," the article says. "When it comes to healthy people without known risk factors, however, the experts part company."

The article also notes that the cholesterol theory, rejected by the animal foods industries, was adopted enthusiastically by other food manufacturers.

"While meat, egg, and dairy food producers gagged on the AHA's (American Heart Assn.'s) advice, some food companies were quick to exploit public concern about cholesterol. The term 'no cholesterol' was advertised as though it meant 'germ-free,' while margarine and vegetable oils were often promoted as if they were drugs," the article states.

According to Consumer Reports, the crux of the issue is whether or not dietary manipulation can reduce total mortality. In this respect, the results so far have been discouraging to those who support the Vitamins found to detoxify PCB's, nitrosamines, pesticides, aflatoxin

Good nutrition—especially Vitamins A and C—can detoxify nitrosamines, cigarette smoke, pollution and PCB's, a university study concludes.

Reports UPI, University of Massachusetts Public Health Professor Edward Calabrese has published a two-volume study on research describing how vitamins, minerals and other nutrients react with pollutants, often defusing their toxic or carcinogenic qualities.

Most protective, however, is Vitamin C, which helps the liver metabolize and detoxify several pollutants, including PCB's (polychlorinated biphenyl), pesticides and certain drugs, he said.

The vitamin has also been found to inhibit the effects of nitrites, found in tobacco smoke and cured meats. Nitrites react with substances in the digestive tract to form nitrosamines, which have been shown to cause cancer in laboratory tests.

It has been found that Vitamin C in the digestive tract, along with nitrites, ties them up and prevents formation of nitrosamines, Calabrese said.

Calabrese said many studies from the 1960s to the present "have clearly shown that an elevated level of Vitamin A in the diet prevents the occurrence of chemically induced cancer."

Vitamin A also appears to reduce the carcinogenicity of aflatoxin, a powerful carcinogen found in peanut butter and some grains, Calabrese said.

Supply, demand to balance

Marketings of meat animals were up slightly last year (1980), but lower prices for them pushed cash receipts down sharply, according to a USDA report just issued. Marketings of meat animals totaled 73.4 billion lbs., up fractionally from the 73.2 billion lbs. marketed in 1979.

RICHARDSON

Profit squeeze: Cash receipts from those marketings totaled only $40.6 billion, down eight percent from the 1979 total of $42.9 billion. Moreover, cattle and calves accounted for nearly 77% of those cash receipts. Hogs and pigs added 22% and sheep and lambs one percent.

Marketings of cattle and calves, the report shows, totaled 49.2 billion lbs., down three percent from a year earlier, 16% below the record high (58.5 billion lbs.) set in 1977. But, cattle averaged only $62.40 per cwt. last year, down from the record high of $66.10 set in 1979. Calf prices dropped from the record average of $88.70 in 1979 and $76.80 last year.

Adding it up: As a result, cash receipts from cattle and calves declined from the record $34.4 billion in 1979 to $31.2 billion last year. Hogs didn't do any better. The price per hundredweight dropped from the $41.80 average of 1979 to $38 last year. Total cash receipts from hogs declined one percent to $8.9 billion.

Just seven states accounted for 54% of the marketings and 58% of the cash receipts from cattle and calves. Texas alone, accounted for 12.5% (six billion pounds) of the marketings, and the same percentage of the cash receipts at $3.9 billion.

The other leading beef states in terms of marketings and cash receipts are Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Oklahoma, Colorado and California.

With the recent upturn in fed prices—and talk of $80 cattle—some stockmen are overlooking last year's record. The fact is, retail beef prices would have to rise to around three dollars per pound average price to support $80 cattle. In perspective, retail prices set new records last year, including the highest weekly average ($2.45 per lb.) and highest yearly average ($2.38 per lb.). Keep that in mind when you judge the performance of the current cattle market.

GLEN RICHARDSON

International agricultural product supply and demand should be in balance during the 1980's, assuming normal weather patterns. Clayton Yuetter, president of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, said recently reports CNS.

In the past, especially in the 1950's and 1960's, a surplus of agricultural products was the norm, Yuetter said. Although "we are not going to starve by 1990," he said, some shortages will appear.

In a speech to the annual Food Merchandising Institute Convention, Yeutter said the major problem will be food distribution. The U.S. will be the major supplier and must find countries with increased population and increased

Meat departments need to be re-vamped

Because of increased costs, competition from other grocery products and changing consumer demands, meat departments are being pressured to change, said two researchers at the Food Marketing Institute's annual convention in Dallas, Texas.

Meat departments must pay attention to consumer demands, John Allen and Thomas Pierson, professors of food systems economics and management at Michigan State University, told a meat marketing seminar at the convention. They presented results of a survey of retailers, wholesalers, meat packers and industry associations completed in Sept. 1980, reports CNS.

Consumers are looking for value, convenience, and consistent eating quality, they said. A new group of meat buyers needs information and assistance on how to prepare meat, they said. That new group includes those who have reached the age to buy meat and an increasing number of men who are buying meat for the home because more women are working outside the home.

However, the non-food sector is perceived by grocers as the fastest growing department while the meat department is the slowest, they said.

Because of the changing family—now the average family of four makes up less than 40% of households—convenience has become and important factor, they said. The search for convenience has become an important factor, they said. The search for convenience has consumers buying frozen and packaged foods because information on cooking and storing is on the label. Also frozen meat does not leak from its package as fresh meat often does, they said.

In addition to convenience, fewer red meats are

The meat department accounts for 20.5% of all sales in a typical supermarket, according to a survey of 321 retailers done by the Food Marketing Institute.

Supermarkets carry an average of 150 fresh meat items, the survey showed.

Supermarkets purchased 42% of their beef in primal form, 35% in subprimal form and 21% in carcass form, the survey said. Only two percent of the fresh beef is delivered already in retail cuts.

The survey found that the meat departments usually employ five persons, with labor accounting for an average of 9.3% of meat department costs to consumers.

Baucus sponsors class action bill

U.S. Senator Max Baucus (D-Mont.) has introduced legislation designed to enable cattlemen to bring class action lawsuits against retail food chains under current anti-trust law.

Cattlemen under the terms of the Illinois Brick Co. court case, are defined as indirect sellers when talking price-fixing charges against the large retail food chains. Only direct sellers can sue for damages, the court ruled in the Illinois case.

Senate Bill 931 would have implications for all industries, and means the little men will have some protection against large companies, says the Senator. He has spoken out numerous times against the situation where ranchers and farmers have no choice in selling their cattle "when faced with a powerful corporate buyer who fixes a low price on steak."

Thus far no other sponsors have been found for the bill.

Last year Senator Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) introduced a bill along the same lines, but less narrowly focused than the Baucus bill. Kennedy's bill cleared his Senate Judiciary Committee but was never brought before the full Senate. Business lobbyists were largely responsible for the failure of the measure.

WHAT IS THE PROTEIN DOLLAR?

ANSWER: It's the billions spent by America's consumers each year for meat and other proteins.

Who's spending that dollar? Who's competing for it? Why is the competition becoming more and more intense? What can the livestock and red meat industry do to maintain and improve its position in this new atmosphere? These are questions Livestock Marketing Congress '81 will tackle . . . this June 10-12, in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

The theme, "Competing For The Protein Dollar," addresses the growing concern about shifting patterns of protein consumption and what it means to the future of the red meat industry.

Congress '81 will study what's behind those shifts, with top speakers from the livestock industry, business, academia and beyond. The Congress will look at the economic pressures on both the consumer's pocketbook and the livestock industry's production and marketing efficiency, improvements in the competitors' products, and increased consumer concern with matters of diet and health. And Congress '81 will look at the red meat industry's competition, the changing nature of our consumers, and the long-term future of the livestock industry.

This year it's all taking place in beautiful Minneapolis — a great place to enjoy memorable social activities and take part in a vital industry conference . . . this June.

Market Roundup:

Unbalanced market has prices lagging

WHEN BEEF PACKERS tried to sell dressed beef at $109 per cwt. choice, YG-3, 500-900 lbs. steer carcasses last week, they were faced with stiff resistance. Dressed beef prices fluctuated wildly, beginning with an abnormally wide spread of $105-109, then dropping to $101. Prices then recovered to the $104-105 level, which, according to many market sources, is the legitimate price for beef.

Cash cattle and dressed beef prices simply moved too far too fast, and retailers did not have time to adjust. Market sources said until retailers feel that a true price has been established, they will turn to more stable priced pork and poultry.

Fed cattle numbers tightened during April and are expected to decline even more in May. However, market sources said prices would not have moved as fast or as far if major packers had not "weighed up" large numbers of cattle, tightening market ready supplies even further.

Dubbed by some as "the race to the 70s," major packers bought more cattle than they could kill. However, those bought-in-advance supplies have now dwindled and those major packers will need to purchase cattle this week and next for immediate slaughter needs helping market prices to recover.

Area cattlemen were on hand to select from the Muddy Creek Ranch offering of Simmental bulls. This was the largest offering of two-year-old Simmental bulls to sell in the area this spring. Buyers were present from Nebraska, Colorado and Wyoming.

The sale price was quite steady and solid in ranchers' price range. Deer Creek Ranch, Gordon, and Lawrence Haug, Bushnell, were volume buyers.

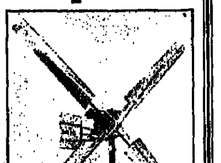
BOWJON Water Lift System



Efficient water lift system cuts cost. Unlike any other windmill-water pump in the world, the Bowjon does not have to stand over the well or water source. It can be positioned wherever the wind achieves maximum velocity on a continual basis . . . up to ½ mile from the windhead.
Easily installed and maintained.
Proven performance on farms and ranches.
The few moving parts in the entire Bowjon system are all above ground. There are no cylinders to light. No cylinders to plunger assembly. The only maintenance is to check the compressor oil every three months and clean the filters.
Dealerships available in open areas.

"Eight large-scale clinical trials have been conducted in Australia, England, Finland, Norway and the U.S., using dietary intervention to reduce the incidence of heart disease and mortality in middle-aged men," the article states.

"Approximately 3500 men were studied for two to 10 years, and serum-cholesterol reductions of seven to 16% were achieved. In most of the studies, there was only a marginal decrease in coronary disease incidence and no effect on overall mortality."

"The cancer question"—raised by a number of recent studies linking low cholesterol with increased cancer risk—was also examined by Consumer Reports.

"Several studies, including one conducted recently by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, have found a significant association between low serum cholesterol and increased cancer mortality, particularly colon cancer."

The Consumer Reports story, while encouraging, does not mean the controversy has come to an end, Huston says.

"We need more research on this issue, by groups like the Meat Board and by government and private agencies. Only when all the facts are known can we say for sure that the diet-heart theory is a thing of the past."

Meat departments need to be re-vamped

being bought because of a high-priced image coupled with a sluggish economy and changing beef and pork prices relative to poultry prices, they said.

New packaging of meats is necessary for consumers' information and convenience, they said.

Allen and Pierson predicted one possible change could be more vacuum-packed meat. Whether consumers will accept the darker-colored vacuum-packed meat is yet to be seen, they said.

One wholesaler attending the seminar, Carl Brooks, from Abilene, Texas, said vacuum-packing meat is the way of the future. He predicted that it would be widespread in the next 10 to 15 years. He added that most meats will be cut and vacuum-packed centrally and then sent to the retail store.

Central cutting of meat—especially beef but soon pork as well—will increasingly be done at the packer level, Allen and Pierson agreed. At this time, 65 to 70% of beef is centrally cut—or boxed—and now that union restrictions on boxed beef have been lifted in most cities, 80% or more will be boxed by 1985, they said.

This change is likely because butchers are becoming businessmen and centrally cut and wrapped meat is more economical, they said.

Other trends they predicted are more boneless meat, leaner meat and smaller portion sizes.

Allen and Pierson also expect segmentation of stores to affect meat merchandising. Because many stores are aimed at specific segments of society, the meat department must conform, they said.

But to be able to design meat departments to fit the needs of consumers, more information is needed, they said—not only about who shops at the store, but also who buys what cuts of meat, how much meat is lost to shrinkage or theft and other specific costs.

They predicted widespread use of scanning systems in meat departments would help provide that additional information. These systems are already being used at the checkout counter and to keep tract of inventory, they said.

Supply, demand to balance

purchasing power, Yeutter said.

Mexico will be a prime export target because it fits these two criteria, he said. Conversely, China, whose population will increase by 300 million people by the year 2000, has little capital, Yeutter said. This year China asked for aid from the U.S. for the first time, and that is likely to continue, he said.

The greatest potential for international trade is in Asia rather than in Europe, Yuetter said. Tawain, Korea, Indonesia and Australia as well as Nigeria and Mexico are important potential importers of U.S. products, he said. The USSR also is an important customer if the U.S. can win that market back, Yeutter said.

Meanwhile, the main U.S. competitors are Canada, Australia, Argentina, Brazil, South Africa and, to a lesser degree, Colombia, he said.

The long-term trend for farm prices is higher, Yuetter said, with high interest rates devastating, especially to the livestock industry. Because some cattle feeders have been losing as much as $150 per head, many are not going to survive, according to Yuetter.

The food supply is somewhat rigid this year, he said. If the economy improves, resulting in increased demand, retail prices will rise into 1982, Yuetter said, but retail prices in 1981 will be relatively low in comparison.

Trade barriers need to be lifted in other countries to permit free trade of U.S. products, he said, but, at the same time, the U.S. must not be hypocritical by placing restraints on the importation of Japanese cars.

Exports will not push U.S. food prices through the ceiling but will help keep the dollar strong, Yuetter said.

THE PAP TEST—A new procedure used by Colorado State University and the Veterinary Science Department is the Pulmonary Arterial Pressure test. This test gives an indication of the animals predisposition to brisket disease, which has great significance to any cattleman that runs in the high elevations of the West. Nevadans to challenge MX proposal in court

tion Assn.'s main objective is to ensure the continued multiple use of the public lands for the benefits of all users of the public lands and the people of Nevada," said Lee. Lee finalized his announcement by saying, "President Reagan will make his decision on the basing mode for the MX in July. We hope this litigation will effectively expose the MX Missile proposal as it really is. The Department of Defense now has over three million acres of our state's land and we feel we've given enough."

At the same conference Dr. Tony Leaperance, professor at the Mac C. Fleischman College of Agriculture, University of Nevada, explained, "MX will affect everyone. As American taxpayers, you will be soaked with a minimum of $2000 per family of four." That figure could rise as high as $4000 if the system has to be expanded, he said. Not only will Americans pay for the MX with their tax dollars, they will also be hit on an everyday basis with inflated prices for goods and services.

Leaperance maintains that ranchers thrpughout the Great Basin Region would be crippled by the land-based mode, while ranches within the MX area will become uneconomical. This results from the loss of over 700,000 AUM's of forage. An AUM is a unit measuring the amount of forage necessary for one cow for one month), the loss of critical grazing areas and winter range essential to their operations, people-related impacts such as vandalism and destruction of private property, and other socio-economic impacts.

"The Cattlemen are fighting for their lives in order to protect rights vital to their survival and which the Air Force prefers to ignore. Grazing rights, water rights, and property rights have been conveniently de-emphasized in the MX DEIS," according to Wayne Hage, chairman of the Nevada Cattlmen's Assn. ad hoc MX committee.

Hage went on to explain. "Early on in the MX proposal the Cattlemen tried to avoid a fight. We hired a consulting firm to explain what provisions the Air Force needed to address in order to adequately measure the impacts of the MX on our industry. The MX DEIS is evidence that the Air Force didn't take us seriously. We have been forced into this litigation against our will, but if viable livestock operations are to survive, we're left with only one alternative and that is to fight."

Taylor Creek Lad 9048, 3/15/79 by Big Dry Lad GV Gordon; Ian MacKenzie, Otter, $1500.

This annual spring sale venture for the Ross firm was hampered somewhat by the dry conditions that prevail this year. Most of the cattle in the sale sold, however. The going has been better, but no one in the trade area expects an aggressive market under the conditions of dryness and feed conditions that exist here at the present time. The heifers sold in four drafts. A total of 48 head sold at $460 each; and an additional 52 head sold at $450 each. All sold to Richard Fisher, Valentine, for breeding purposes this season.

This was a typical Redd Ranches sale as a bright, warm day greated the huge crowd that came to Paradox, Colo. The welcome mat is always out and as the potential buyers arrived, they are given all the performance data necessary to assist them in their buying selections. The Redd program centers on performance and the buyers have come to use this information extensively in their buying.

Although prices were somewhat lower this year, the bulls were top caliber as always. Demand was especially strong on the Red Angus bulls as many of the old time Redd customers decided to 'try one.' Actually the entire sale was a good one for the buyers as most would not be able to buy the superior genetics available here for the dollars they invested.

Volume buyers included Uriah Jones: Thatcher Ranch; Austin Decker and Sons, Durango; K Ranch Co., West Ranch, Trinidad; Indian Creek Ranch, Monticello, Utah; Bob Warburton, Vernal, Utah; and Edwin Kaime, Farmington, N.M.
